Emblem. Approved on 2 October 2001. Redrawn on 12 January 2016.

Blazon. On a disc Azure, a starburst of nine points Or in perspective, overall issuing from dexter base to sinister a demi-wizard in profile, face and hand Gold Brown; eye, hair, mustache and beard Sable; hat and cloak Gules garnished of the fourth, extending his dexter hand towards an eagle volant from sinister chief of the second, head Argent, feet of the third, langued and claws of the fifth; all within a narrow border Red.

Attached below the disc, a White scroll edged with a narrow Red border and inscribed "56TH OPERATIONS SUPPORT SQ" in Red letters.

Motto. Wizards.

Significance. Ultramarine blue and Air Force yellow are the Air Force colors. Blue alludes to the sky, the primary theater of Air Force operations. Yellow refers to the sun and the excellence required of Air Force personnel. The golden radiance joining the wizard and the eagle is indicative of the myriad missions the unit performs and is a shining example for others to follow. The eagle's outstretched wing signifies the unit's far-reaching impact. The wizard embodies the wisdom and skill of Air Force leadership.

Narrative.

The unit was originally constituted on 25 January 1943 as the 56th Airdrome Squadron and activated on 1 February 1943 at Grand Island Army Air Base, Nebraska. It was assigned to Second Air Force. On 25 March the unit shifted to Pocatello Army Air Base, Idaho. On 3 April 1943, the unit moved to Camp Williams, in central Wisconsin. On 16 April 1943, it was redesignated as the 56th Airdrome Squadron (Special). What made airdrome squadrons special was they were organized, trained and equipped for tactical employment as ground servicing units to support the combat units stateside and/or in the combat zone. Their mission was to furnish all of the necessary "housekeeping" functions such as administration, mess and security, chemical and medical services, furnishing and supplying first and secondary echelon maintenance and supply, and organizing and operating airdromes. Airdrome squadrons were organized to meet the demand for a higher degree of mobility that was desired in warfare. It took about six weeks to move and set up a combat unit's organic maintenance and support capabilities in a new location. The operational units could not go that long without maintenance and support functions and still be ready to conduct combat operations. Therefore, the special airdrome squadrons filled that role temporarily, either stateside or overseas. On 2 May 1943, the unit moved back to Grand Island Army Air Base. On 1 April 1944, it was disbanded. During World War II, the squadron supported Second Air Force bomber training operations.

On 28 October 1991, the unit was reconstituted and redesignated as the 56th Operations Support Squadron. On 1 November 1991, it activated at MacDill Air Force Base, Florida, and was assigned to the 56th Operations Group. It inactivated on 4 January 1994.

When the wing moved to Luke Air Force Base, Arizona, the group and squadron reactivated here on 1 April 1994. In the modern era, the unit supports the wing's mission to train the best F-16 Fighting Falcon and F-35A Lightning II pilots in the world. Today, the squadron provides multi-level operational support to the 56th Fighter Wing and Associate Units.
